PRS 460 – Communication Research Methods

A) Perceptions and Realities of Working College Students: A Phenomenological Study

With the rising costs of higher education and the importance of earning a degree, many students are forced to take on full time jobs while in college. The stresses and struggles these students experience are explored rarely in contemporary research. The purpose of this phenomenological study is to understand how working students communicate their stories about how they balance work, school, and life.

Presenter: Terrance Adams-Jones

B) Divorce from the Child's Perspective: A Phenomenological Study

While divorce is common in the United States, people tell their divorce stories in a variety of way. Since researchers have found that children from divorced families are more likely to be divorced themselves, it is important to understand how children from divorced parents frame their narratives. The purpose of this study is to understand how adults, who experienced their parent's divorce as children, tell their stories.

PRS 460 – Communication Research Methods

A) How Manly Are You? A Phenomenological Study About the Experiences of Male Cheerleaders

Often, men who participate in sports such as cheerleading find it necessary to negotiate their sexuality and their masculinity. The purpose of this qualitative study is to understand the experiences of male cheerleaders, specifically focusing on how they frame their identity in light of their sexuality and masculinity.

Presenter: Robert Hankins

B) Hook-Up Culture: A Phenomenological Study

Many people believe that U.S. college students are doing away with the traditional script of dating and creating and embracing a new script fueled by sexual desire. In the last decade, sexual freedom has been rising especially among college students, and this freedom has led to a new social script and a new culture – a culture of hooking up. The purpose of this study is to understand how college students feel and talk about the hookup culture.

With special thanks to:

Tom Jensen and Shawn Connelly for setting up facilities,
Doug Magnussen and Peter Palermo for accommodating our needs, Chandler Morley and the Sodexo staff for providing the wonderful food, and all of the presenters, sponsors, volunteers, and guests for participating!
