Noting that parts of Asia have some of the highest pollution levels in the world and when tiny polluting particles soar high and get into the clouds that carry over the Atlantic ocean it tends to make the clouds more dense and make storms down stream stronger and larger in size in regions such as North America, and

Concerned that in Beijing outdoor air pollution played a major role in 1.2 million premature deaths in 2010 and the number keeps increasing year by year this is also forty percent of the global total, and

Alarmed that there is currently a cloud that coined the name "the Asian Brown Cloud" lingering over the Indian ocean and even parts of South Asia when viewed from satellite the cloud looks like a giant brown stain hovering the cloud is most easily seen in the earlier months such as January and March but has been seen much later and earlier the most major impact of the brown cloud is on health studies showed in 2002 that nearly two million people died in India from conditions relating to the brown cloud, and

Bearing in mind that pollution from Asia does not only affect its own population but also those across seas some recent studies have shown that pollution from southern Asia has reached as far south as California in South America and some days a slight haze has shown up in the atmosphere in Australia with an odd smell that has traveled through wind from southern Asia;

1) Encourages all nations that have already transitioned over to safer means of power such as wind and solar power to support and help other nations embrace safer means of power;

2) Recommends nations with worsening air pollution switch to safer means of power and or travel to keep not only their air safe for breathing but also travel to increase sight distance;

3) Requests that nations do as much as possible to keep pollution to a minimum with means of switching from older means of power such as coal and wood burning stoves to more moderns ideas such as wind power, water power, or solar panel.

Observing that Scotland has a rich history dating back to the 1st century when Rome invaded and then were repelled back in the 3rd shows their strength and might, The Scottish people pushed back many incursions by Roman leaders like Septimus Severus, Unlike many other countries invaded by Rome their influence did not last on the mighty Scottish people who would prosper onward Constantine II contribution to the formation of the Kingdom of Alba and conformity of Scottish Christianity to Catholic church, This is the first account of a major offense that the English committed to the hardy and noble Scottish, The second act of English tyranny was in 13th century England undermined king John in an attempt to crush Scottish independence, Scotland was saved from this by the legendary William Wallace, In modern times this abuse is still being carried out by the UK, After the Irish people broke away from the UK in 1918 the English have been desperate to regain lost power through the Scottish, and

Recognizing the vast amounts of northern sea oil that Scotland possesses is enough to prove the English crown could not let the noble Scotsmen walk away, Scotland can not benefit from northern sea oil while still part of the UK, If Scotland were to become independent they would become the 12 richest nation from this northern sea oil, Jordan being a oil rich nation recognizes the need for independence of the Scottish people so they can claim what is rightfully theirs, and

Taking in Account that on September 18, 2014 Scotland held a vote for independence this shows the crave true Scotsman have for independence from the UK, The vote was counted at 55.3% of the people voted no for independence, This vote was clearly tampered with in an effort to prevent Scotland from gaining independence so the UK can continue to profit from northern sea oil, Jordan can not stand by and see Scotland suffer from these abuses, seeing that Scotland is not represented fairly in the United Nations action must be taken to free the noble people;
